Architectural Description Continued

The property includes a post-1978 concrete block shop and storage room, both of which are of substandard construction. Once used for farming, the level lot has two mature apricot trees and several invasive ailanthuses. There is no formal landscaping. A relict acequia, thought to be part of the Acequia Publica, courses across the east edge of the property (Photo 4).

North (Façade)

The building faces north with mostly a blank façade (Photos 1 & 5). The west half is the earlier constructed dwelling, consisting of four rooms. Separated by an expansion joint is the 1980s addition holding a dining room and living room (Photo 5). The west side is constructed of adobe and rests on a low foundation, though it is too low to be considered a crawl space. Its walls are roughly 12" thick. The construction of the addition is unclear.

Beginning at the west end is a non-historic faux plank door (Photo 6). Next, still representing the original core, are sliding vinyl windows at the bathroom and kitchen (Photo 7). These windows, like the rest of the units along the portion of the building, are set 3½" to 4½" deep into the wall.

The remaining 14' of the façade represents the non-historic addition, which is entered by a six-panel wood door (Photo 8). Tar stains above the doorway indicate the presence of a porch that was recently removed.

East Elevation

An overhang, which helps drain the roof, traces the east elevation (Photo 9). This portion of the building represents the addition and encloses a large room which is divided into living and dining spaces. The windows on this and the west elevation of the addition are metal fixed units (Photo 10). They are placed nearly flush with the wall.

South Elevation

West Elevation

The short west elevation is the side of the building not attached to the addition (Photo 16). It has a single opening holding an aluminum combination window. The opening’s width and the concrete sill’s style seem more of a mid-century vintage.

Interior

The interior of the older adobe section has four rectangular rooms that are connected by shared doorways rather than a hallway. The ceiling heights vary, with the tallest ceiling measuring 8’ 6” in the northwest entry room (Photo 18). The rooms are spare, lacking moldings or closets, and are all covered with non-historic flooring materials (Photos 18-20). Each room was heated with a stove. The fourth room, located in the northeast corner, is divided into a small bathroom and a kitchen (Photo 21).

The addition has a plywood floor covered with vinyl tiling and a viga-spanned ceiling, interrupted by a skylight (Photo 22).

Shop

Standing at the northeast corner of the property is a shop — perhaps potentially first used as a garage — and an attached storage room (Photo 23). Constructed of concrete masonry units, the shop has a rectangular, dirt-floor room (Photo 24). Its frame roof structure rests precariously on two poles, supported by tilting posts. An adjacent frame storage room is covered with gray coat stucco (Photo 25). Essentially a lean-to, its structure is even more precarious (Photo 26).

The shop is not shown in a 1978 aerial (Fig. 5). Its construction may be linked to a zoning request the second-to-last owner made in 1979 to reduce the side yard setback to build a storage shed.¹

Historical Overview

West San Francisco Street Neighborhood

In the late 19th century, San Francisco Street beyond Guadalupe Street (then named Jefferson and carrying the tracks of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad) ambled northwest toward the broad and deeply troughed Arroyo Mascaras. The arroyo impeded further movement.

An extension of the railroad tracks made in 1887 had lopped off the area from the city, giving it a separate identity. Farm fields surrounded San Francisco Street west of the railroad, similar to what was shown on Joseph de Urrutia’s map nearly 150 years earlier. According to the 1892 Gaynor map, the Ortiz and Duran families owned much of the land north of the street (Fig. 1).

The land had soil of moderate fertility that could support corn, beans, and hay. The crops were watered by Acequia Publica, which ran north and south of the street.² A section of the north alignment passes through the subject property’s backyard.

The area’s agrarian use ended in the early 20th century as landowners north of the road began subdividing their property into small housing tracts. One of these tracts included the Duran Street area, carved out from the former property of José E. Duran who was a prosperous Santa Fe Trail freighter.

A Duran family descendant subdivided a portion of the large estate into the Duran Addition (also called Duran Subdivision) in the 1920s. Elena Street was the first street in the subdivision to develop, receiving piped water and sewerage.³ The uniform 25’x100’ lots led to the urbanization of the once agricultural land.⁴ Parallel Duran, Candelario, and Quintana streets would follow without the same uniformity as Elena.

The urban development of Santa Fe’s west side was notably different from that of the South Capitol area, where housing tracts were being established at the same time. In the South Capitol, homes were designed by architects or builders primarily for Anglo buyers. These homes featured the emerging Pueblo Revival style and followed deed covenants. The south subdivisions included sidewalks and paved streets. In contrast, homeowners on West San Francisco constructed simple adobe structures topped with tin roofs. The roads were unpaved, and sidewalks were absent until the 1970s, when they were finally introduced through a federal War on Poverty program.⁵

By the late 1930s, Duran Street had mostly filled in with homes. All the primary residences were owner-occupied, and the street was entirely populated by families with Spanish surnames. The 1938 city directory indicates the presence of "rear" houses — smaller homes built at the back of properties that were rented out to generate additional income.⁶

A Four-Room Rental

One of these rentals, the subject property, was leased in 1938 to Carlos and Rosa Gonzales. Carlos was in his early 20s and originally from Mexico; he worked as a cook at La Fonda.⁷ Rosa was just 16 years old. They soon moved out and were replaced by another young couple, Henry and Angeline Arrey. Henry was 20 years old. He was born in Arrey, New Mexico, a small farming community in Sierra County named after his grandfather, Urbano Arrey. Henry worked as a taxi driver while Angeline, who was 17, cared for their seven-month-old baby. They paid $4.00 a month to lease the small house.⁸

City directories suggest that the rental was part of the property with the address 127 Duran Street, along with the house fronting the street. Elias Vigil, a cook at La Fonda, lived in the front house and is assumed to have owned the larger property. Thereafter, the back house was leased by a few other tenants, and based on city directories was removed as a rental in the 1950s.

The specific sequence of transactions is not entirely clear, but it seems that the property was separated from the front house in the early 1960s. The back property eventually came under the ownership of Guadalupe and Simona (Simonia) Chavez.⁹ Guadalupe was employed as a correctional officer at the New Mexico State Penitentiary. He and his wife later transferred the property to his brother, Celestino Chavez.¹⁰

Martha J. Baca

The property changed hands several times in the early 1970s before being acquired by Fidel and Martha Ortega in 1976.¹¹ The couple had married the year prior. They sued to quiet the title in 1977, and a year later, they appeared to have divorced, with the property going to Martha, a state employee originally from Colorado. Martha, who would return to using her maiden name of Baca, kept the property until she died in 2022.

Baca was responsible for the changes to the 1930s house. In the 1980s, she added a dining/living room to the east side of the home, along with a portal that has since been removed. She also likely erected the shop and its addition.

Baca fell into financial difficulties, leading the City of Santa Fe and the State of New Mexico to place multiple liens on the property.¹² The property deteriorated significantly over the years. Aerial photographs reveal what began in the early 2000s as a line of parked cars down the driveway and escalated into a lot cluttered with trash (Field 16). A neighbor recalled that Martha struggled with hoarding.¹³

In 2013, Baca created a will that specified her house was to be sold upon her death, with the net proceeds divided equally between St. Vincent de Paul, St. John’s Soup Kitchen, and St. Anne’s Church.¹⁴ Martha J. Baca passed away less than ten years later on New Year’s Eve in 2022 at the age of 74.¹⁵ She was buried in a hardwood coffin at the West St. Ignacio Cemetery in Ignacio, Colorado, alongside her father and several relatives.

A year later, it took several days — and several dumpsters — to remove the accumulated debris at her Duran Street home.

Evaluation of Historical Status

Following the original survey, the recommendation is to maintain Non-Contributing status. The house holds little architectural or historical significance. In addition, the 1985 extension increased its footprint by 34%. The shop and its addition appear to postdate 1978 and are poorly constructed.
